

Original text from <http://www.monalisamania.com/forloveofmonalisa.htm>

Opera 9.6 and IE 7

Preview

Remember that this is only a preview. Your changes have not yet been saved!

Theories about about the Mona Lisa Compiled by Erin Chan. Sources: "Becoming Mona Lisa" by Donald Sassoon and Wikipedia: The Free Encyclopedia, www.monalisamania.com

For centuries, people have come up with theories about the woman behind the most famous image on Earth. Here are some:

- She was pregnant: This theory, first proposed in 1959 by English scholar Dr. Kenneth Keele, holds that because the painting shows the woman with an enlarged thyroid gland she must be pregnant.
- She was a he: Art critic Georges Isarlo proposed that Mona Lisa was a transvestite in 1952 after watching a college play that included a man dressed as a woman. Decades earlier, artist Marcel Duchamp poked fun at the painting by drawing a mustache and beard on a postcard of the Moan Lisa.
- She had a toothache: In 1992, Joseph Borkowski, a professor of operative dentistry, likened Mona Lisa's expression to that of someone who had lost her front teeth.
- She is a self-portrait of Leonardo da Vinci: when flipping a self-portrait by Da Vinci and merging it with the Mona Lisa through digital analysis, Lillian Schwartz found their facial features aligned. In response to the theory, distinguished art historian S.J. Freebergsaid, "The Mona Lisa will survive this crap."
- She was just a normal gal: Ed Harrison, 45, of Clawson opined on the painting while pulling Mona Lisa T-shirts off an automatic press Tuesday at Kurt's Kustom Graphics in Ferndale. "She's not like some beauty queen who's full of make up," Harrison says. "She looks like...an aunt."
- The Mona Lisa is a philosophy: "The Mona Lisa is Leonardo's representation of life and the universe, not of a particular person. It is both feminine and masculine, dark and light, yin and yang". This is what Korie Marshall, 32, of Nova Scotia, Canada concluded in posting on Diane Shipley DeCillis's Web site.
- She's had some orthodontic work done: "Mona had braces and was too embarrassed [sic] to show her teeth. I can imagine Mona's father exclaiming, 'Mona, after all the money we spent on your braces, that's the smile we get?'" This is what Molly B., 13, of Lancaster, S.C., concluded in a posting on DeCillis's Web site.

How it shows in Chrome 4 / Safari 4/ IE8 / Opera 10/

Preview

Remember that this is only a preview. Your changes have not yet been saved!

Theories about about the Mona Lisa Compiled by Erin Chan. Sources: "Becoming Mona Lisa" by Donald Sassoon and Wikipedia: The Free Encyclopedia, www.monalisamania.com For centuries, people have come up with theories about the woman behind the most famous image on Earth.

Here are some:

- She was pregnant: This theory, first proposed in 1959 by English scholar Dr. Kenneth Keele, holds that because the painting shows the woman with an enlarged thyroid gland she must be pregnant.
- She was a he: Art critic Georges Isarlo proposed that Mona Lisa was a transvestite in 1952 after watching a college play that included a man dressed as a woman. Decades earlier, artist Marcel Duchamp poked fun at the painting by drawing a mustache and beard on a postcard of the Moan Lisa.
- She had a toothache: In 1992, Joseph Borkowski, a professor of operative dentistry, likened Mona Lisa's expression to that of someone who had lost her front teeth.
- She is a self-portrait of Leonardo da Vinci: when flipping a self-portrait by Da Vinci and merging it with the Mona Lisa through digital analysis, Lillian Schwartz found their facial features aligned. In response to the theory, distinguished art historian S.J. Freebergsaid, "The Mona Lisa will survive this crap."
- She was just a normal gal: Ed Harrison, 45, of Clawson opined on the painting while pulling Mona Lisa T-shirts off an automatic press Tuesday at Kurt's Kustom Graphics in Ferndale. "She's not like some beauty queen who's full of make up," Harrison says. "She looks like...an aunt."
- The Mona Lisa is a philosophy: "The Mona Lisa is Leonardo's representation of life and the universe, not of a particular person. It is both feminine and masculine, dark and light, yin and yang". This is what Korie Marshall, 32, of Nova Scotia, Canada concluded in posting on Diane Shipley DeCillis's Web site.
- She's had some orthodontic work done: "Mona had braces and was too embarrassed [sic] to show her teeth. I can imagine Mona's father exclaiming, 'Mona, after all the money we spent on your braces, that's the smile we get?'" This is what Molly B., 13, of Lancaster, S.C., concluded in a posting on DeCillis's Web site.

<pre>..</pre> tag added to a text.

How it shows in FireFox versions

<pre>..</pre> tag added to text for more than one occurrence.

Preview

Remember that this is only a preview. Your changes have not yet been saved!

Theories abound about the Mona Lisa Compiled by Erin Chan. Sources: "Becoming Mona Lisa" by Donald Sassoon and Wikipedia: The Free Encyclopedia,

www.monalisamania.com

For centuries, people have come up with theories about the woman behind the most famous image on Earth.

Here are some:

- She was pregnant: This theory, first proposed in 1959 by English scholar Dr. Kenneth Keele, holds that because the painting shows the woman with an enlarged thyroid gland she must be pregnant.

- She was a he: Art critic Georges Isarlo proposed that Mona Lisa was a transvestite in 1952 after watching a college play that included a man dressed as a woman.

Decades earlier, artist Marcel Duchamp poked fun at the painting by drawing a mustache and beard on a postcard of the Mona Lisa.

- She had a toothache:

In 1992, Joseph Borkowski, a professor of operative dentistry, likened

Mona Lisa's expression to that of someone who had lost her front teeth.

- She is a self-portrait of Leonardo da Vinci: when flipping a self-portrait by Da Vinci and merging it with the Mona Lisa through digital analysis, Lillian Schwartz found their facial features aligned. In response to the theory, distinguished art historian S.J. Freebergsaid, "The Mona Lisa will survive this crap."

- She was just a normal gal: Ed Harrison, 45, of Clawson opined on the painting while pulling Mona Lisa T-shirts off an automatic press Tuesday at Kurt's Kustom Graphics in Ferndale. "She's not like some beauty queen who's full of make up," Harrison says. "She looks like...an aunt."

- The Mona Lisa is a philosophy: "The Mona Lisa is Leonardo's representation of life and the universe, not of a particular person. It is both feminine and masculine, dark and light, yin and yang". This is what Korie Marshall, 32, of Nova Scotia, Canada concluded in posting on Diane Shipley DeCillis's Web site. - She's had some orthodontic work done. "Mona had braces and was too embarrassed [sic] to show her teeth. I can imagine Mona's father exclaiming, 'Mona, after all the money we spent on your braces, that's the smile we get?"

This is what Holly B., 12, of Lancaster, S.C., concluded in a posting on DeCillis's Web site.